Bluegrass Express

Three Decades, Hundreds of Volunteers, Thousands of Songs

By Claire Levine

It's doubtful that the founders of the Oregon Bluegrass Association thought ahead to consider their 30-plus year legacy. In fact, if they had stopped to think about it, they may have questioned if the organization would last beyond its first five years.

Yet in 2013, as the OBA celebrates the 30th anniversary of its first by-laws, the founders should be proud that they created a dynamic and sustainable organization.

Reading through the old Expresses, one is struck by several things:

- The phrase, "There is nothing new under the sun," seems particularly applicable to a bluegrass organization. OBA members are having the same discussions today as they did 30 years ago. Issues of structure, location, role, money – and t-shirts – continue to be debated, as they were in the first board meetings.

- At the same time, the nature of the music has changed . . . and that too continues to be a subject for debate.

organizational talent, its understanding of Robert's Rules of Order – and certainly its budgetary skills – have waxed and waned, the OBA continues. In some ways it's healthier than ever.

The OBA Board of Directors and volunteers gathered at Sonny Hammond's home in 1982

The current membership should congratulate the founders and the hundreds of volunteers who have kept the OBA alive and thriving during the economic, cultural -- and musical -- changes of the past 30 years.

For starters

The OBA founders had a vision: To promote bluegrass music and musicians. The early board members wanted to create a way for musicians to connect with each other, and with fans. But community building wasn't foremost on their minds.

What was? Well, getting booked, actually.

Most of the founders were perform-

The OBA holds board elections each April as individual terms expire. The Board of Directors invites you to join our monthly meetings. We welcome your visit and ideas, opinions and proposals. Or, just come to see what we're doing! We generally meet the second Tuesday of each month at 7:30 p.m. The location is subject to change. Call us or email any board member for time, location and directions.

President's Message

A shout out to the board!

Greetings, bluegrassers! I know this festival season treated you well! And I hope you chose to round off your season with us at our 6th Annual Bluegrass and Old Time Picker's Fest, October 4-6th at Pendarvis Farm in Happy Valley, OR. Perhaps we raised a glass to bluegrass together. The timing of this Express will probably have this issue anxiously awaiting you in the cozy confines of your mailbox when you return home.

I just wanted to take an opportunity to give a shout out to the board! We have some energetic members and their energy has been tested this festival season during their president's proximate absence - some kind of Michigan Bed & Breakfast, getting married thing...

I hope you're as proud of the board and volunteers as I am. It took some major shuffling to maintain our normal festival presence - table, merchandise and volunteers. We cranked out a new line of t-shirts, which sold like the proverbial Picker's Fest hot cakes! There's some behind the scenes work happening to our website in efforts to put our secured grant to use. Some roles are transitioning as well: both the Membership Director and the Treasurer, which involves training and time for a smooth transition. Our Bluegrass Express newsletter team continues to crank out good, timely information. Our board members are working hard so that everything stays smooth and seamless for you. We do hope you noticed some of our efforts at our ever evolving and growing Picker's Fest. All of this accomplished through their hard work, communication and teamwork.

Huzzah to you, board members and volunteers of the Oregon Bluegrass Association! I/we couldn't do any of it without your blood (not really blood), sweat and bluegrass!

This is the last issue of the year and I know it seems early, but in grand retail spirit... enjoy your holidays, however you choose to celebrate! Let your loved ones know they're loved! And...if you're so inclined, buy them an OBA t-shirt!

As always...

Cheers, Peace, and Love,

Three Decades of the OBA

ing in bands. A 2008 article in the Express describes the vision of Steve Reischman, first OBA president. He saw the OBA “. . . as a serious organization that would support the business of bluegrass, rather than be just a fan club. His goal was to bring bluegrass to a wider audience in a more professional format.”

One goal was, “to fight the Hee Haw factor. We wanted to make people aware of the intelligent music that was being performed and called bluegrass.”

It is impossible to summarize 30 years (actually 31 years, since the OBA began a full year before its by-laws were approved) of an organization. But this article will attempt to look at some of the constants and the changes the OBA has experienced since its start.

What stays the same? The challenges

Over the years, board perspectives have changed about many things. For example, some boards wanted to make sure there was enough money in the coffers to handle emergencies and to pass on to future boards. Some presidents had a different perspective – use up every penny in the treasury if it means providing members the most fun and opportunity.

Here’s an example of one board chair trying to balance it out. In June of 1985, Ben Coker (master of understatement) wrote, “. . .the OBA produced three concerts in Portland this spring. (They) were not a rousing financial success. We cleared $57 on John Hartford and $44 on Ralph Stanley. We lost $518 on Jim and Jesse.

“We wanted to make people aware of the intelligent music that was being performed and called bluegrass.”

. . . The Board of Directors and the Concert Committee are reassessing the OBA’s role in concert production. We will be asking for your help.”

The money question seemed to have overlapped the “What is bluegrass, anyway” question – which may actually be a more enduring question than “What is the meaning of life?”

Three Decades of the OBA

by Claire Levine

An eloquent letter in a 1985 Express stated, "I think there has been too much emphasis on money recently . . . There aren't any stockholders to report to, and many of us would like to see less consideration of the potential "draw" of a band, or of whether a certain show will be commercially successful. . . We formed the organization to promote BLUEGRASS, not related hybrids that are perceived as being better draws at the box office."

Another recurring theme -- how "Oregon" is the OBA? Letters and board comments often expressed a desire to reach more parts of the state. In fact, the idea of chapters was floated in the second year of the OBA's life. At one point, the board set a goal of holding gospel shows in six cities around the state.

In September, 1986, Susan Langner wrote, "Like many organizations, the OBA has tried to do too much, too fast, without consideration of the inevitable polarization which results from what a diverse group bluegrass lovers are. (She describes burnout and departures and general lack of energy.)"

"For the coming year -- STOP and take stock."

This is similar to current discussion on the board -- with plenty of great ideas and initiatives, the current co-chairs want to be sure that they use volunteer and financial resources wisely and cautiously.

At least once during the first 10 years, the board went through some very hard times before regaining its resilience. One board member wrote in an old issue of the Express, "The treasury has several thousand dollars, but the Board of Directors is barely able to function. . . Many members expect the Board and the OBA to 'do something.' The Board as presently staffed is incapable of doing very much at all, causing ill will, frustration and misunderstanding . . ."

Whoo-eee! Strong stuff -- and amazingly honest for a membership publication!

Time changes everything

FROM THE EARLY EXPRESSES

- John Dopyera, one of the two inventors of the dobro, spent his last years in Grants Pass.
- Rural Delivery -- which still performs at major festivals around the Northwest -- opened for Hot Rize in 1983 at the Hillsboro Bluegrass Festival.
- Steve Reischman, first OBA president, organized the weekly Zoograss events at the Oregon Zoo. These popular events eventually morphed into a weekly summer concert series for a broad range of music styles.
- Chick Rose was the first OBA Express advertising manager.
- In the mid-1980s, the OBA held a picking party -- in Longview, Washington.
- A correspondent named "Sasquatch Sam" used to report on bluegrass activity in eastern Oregon.
- Peter Kieslich wrote to the OBA from the German Republic in 1985. Apologizing for his poor English, he wrote, "I think I'm the greatest country-music fan in Easter Germany. . . Besides the good old country music from the early 30's until the middle 60's I like yet very dobro instrumentals, gospel-country-music, country duets and the good clean BG music. . . We all must fight today for the preservation of the REAL COUNTRY MUSIC! KEEP IT COUNTRY FOREVER.
- In 1985, the Tumwater High School festival offered a $500 first prize for its banjo contest. (Could they trust a banjo player with that much money?)
- Rick Winter reminisced on the first time he played the banjo. It was a Sears Silvertone that he received on July 15, 1963. "I practiced sitting on the wheat truck, waiting for the combine to come around the field again."

The Wally's -- 1991 OBA Gospel Show (OBA Archives)

world of 2013 is very different from that world in 1983.

The musicians. Volume 1, Issue 1 of the Express featured a photo of Bill Monroe, followed by Lester Flatt and Earl Scruggs; Ralph Stanley; Jimmy Martin; and Jim and Jesse.

In today's bluegrass world, it seems doubtful you could identify musicians with the same stature, identity and impact. What does this mean for the OBA?

In 1983, it's likely that every OBA member had at least heard of, if not listened to, these performers. Today, what bluegrass stars rank with those dominant bluegrass icons – assuming we could even all agree on what the definition of bluegrass is?

If you went to a bluegrass festival and asked the first 100 people you met if they knew who Ricky Skaggs is, would they all say “yes,” as they would have 30 years ago when asked about Bill Monroe? If not Ricky Skaggs, who?

Del McCoury? Dailey & Vincent?
Frank Solivan?

They might all know who Alison Krauss is, but would those who hold to the “True Bluegrass Way” approve? Would they say Rhonda Vincent is the true queen of bluegrass? Do they prefer Sierra Hull?

And do most OBA members care about the definition of bluegrass today? When they go to a jam, do they expect to hear the songs of Flatt & Scruggs and the Stanleys? Do they listen to the Old Crow Medicine Show, Mumford and Sons, Chris Thiele and the Wailin' Jennys? Do they expect old-time music mixed in with their bluegrass? Is an open-backed banjo equal to one with a resonator?

What songs do jammers have in common? What bands do they expect to see at an OBA event? Will they be happy with a mixture of the Loafers and Wayward Vessel plus a square dance band?

And need this be the board's concern? Or is the OBA's role to let its members define what they want to hear -- and give them opportunities to listen to it all?

The OBA History Quiz

In 1985 a letter from Southern Oregon announced that Larry Bulaich was pulling together a band with Jeff Jones, Glenn Freese, Bob Evoniuk and Steve Hardesty. “Larry doesn't have a name for the band yet, but they were recently booked at . . . the Backstage IV in Ashland.”

Do you know what the band became known as? If so, email cjuliawein@gmail.com. You'll be entered in a drawing to win a prize from the OBA boutique!

Three Decades of the OBA

by Claire Levine

Venues and attendance.

In 1985, the OBA sponsored Hot Rize at the World Forestry Center in Portland. The OBA had to turn people away because they'd sold out the 800-seat venue.

That just doesn't happen anymore. For whatever reason, people aren't paying to hear music as they once did.

Many of the clubs that once hosted bluegrass are long gone. Venues that host bluegrass often expect bands to play for free -- or bring in enough fans to pay the venue, the exact opposite of when venues promised bands a guarantee.

During the 1990s, the OBA Gospel Show filled large venues like the Aladdin Theater with a combination of national and regional acts. Today, even Hot Rize doesn't sell out the Aladdin.

So what is the role of a group like the OBA, which can no longer ensure it can fill up a room and therefore can't guarantee the cost of national acts anymore? How does it support local and national musicians? Is that its role anymore?

The beat goes on

So the challenges continue, and someone who cares to could examine the underlying functions and purpose of the OBA.

And yet, the 2013 organization is as vigorous as it's ever been. The bank account is healthy; the board, with its two co-chairs and many volunteers, has tremendous energy and enthusiasm. The membership meeting and the annual Pickers Festival win rave reviews.

What do you expect?

The success of the OBA is based on a continuing stream of bluegrass fans who add their own spirit to the organization. Attend the events; contact the board members; write letters to the Express; volunteer. Let the board and other members know what you'd like to see -- and together figure out how to make it happen.

Congratulations to everyone who's been a part of the OBA for 30 -- or is it really 31 -- years.

FROM THE EARLY EXPRESSES

- Red Allen wore turtleneck sweaters.
- A letter from Greg Roberts, certainly the most irreverent M.C. in Oregon bluegrass history, reflects on the end of the Clark College Bluegrass Festival. “. . . I felt sad to see this good old festival crawl and kick like a poisoned dog, when it might have received proper treatment, or at least been put out of its misery . . . the victim always had suffered with multiple ailments, from uncaring sound crews to crummy advertising and weird non-grass music -- but moving old Clark out of the crisp autumn air and into the August heat was really what put an end to a long General Franco-type death watch.”
- Joe Ross, who continues to write for the Express, was present at the first OBA meeting and offered to take on the role of Publicity Coordinator.

SPECIAL THANKS

There are many people who can't be thanked enough for their early contributions to the OBA.

But two of the principal ones -- and possibly least acknowledged -- are Susan and Fred Langner. For six years, they produced the Express -- well before desktop publishing made it easy to do with the click of a mouse. They wrote, edited, typed, cut, pasted and produced -- they estimated they spent 100 hours on each issue.

Many other names show up repeatedly in early issues. They were not presidents, nor were they performers. They were just dedicated folks who sold advertising, took minutes, managed the bank accounts and handled the mailings. The current board wants to thank each of you for the day-to-day tasks that kept the organization alive.

Turning the Volume Up to Eleven

By Claire Levine

Interviewing Tony McCormick is a little like listening to Car Talk on public broadcasting. Like Click and Clack, he punctuates every sentence with a laugh – one of those contagious chuckles so that you can't help but laugh, too.

The OBA webmaster's laugh isn't the only thing that's constant – he's a nonstop power source, focusing intense energy on anything he's interested in.

For example, about 10 years ago he picked up the banjo (actually, he re-picked it up, after a passing attempt when he was 19 years old).

"I'm a both-feet-in kind of guy," Tony said, and he applied that enthusiasm to the banjo.

"I learned three chords, took a couple lessons – and started looking for jams where I could find them." He and a friend wandered into the Produce Row Café jam - a high-powered gathering with some very good pickers. "We were terrified," Tony said.

But luckily Fred Coates, Mr. Encouragement, recognized Tony and his friends as "fish out of water." "He started telling us what the chords were and told us soon we'd be in bands" (which turned out to be the truth).

In his quest for more jams and more bluegrass, Tony started haunting the OBA website. And he hated it. It wasn't kept up to date. It was hard to find information. He wanted to do something about it.

As a certified computer nerd, Tony decided he would go to an OBA meeting and offer his services. The next thing he knew, he was a board member (much to his distress, since he'd just left two very time-consuming positions on other nonprofits).

When Tony started, the OBA was the website equivalent of a manual typewriter. It was all custom programmed, so that only another programmer could love it. Over the years, he simplified a few things so that others could update the calendar (with thanks to Chris Knight for keeping things up to date). Eventually Tony, along with Ken Chappell of Wayward Vessel, created a self-service function for the calendar.

Today, Tony is heading up a total website revamp. Thanks to Michelle Traver, who wrote a grant proposal for seed money, the OBA was able to invest in more self-service applications. Soon, members will be able to sign up online and update their own membership information so they never fall off the mailing list.

The OBA also is looking for an intern who can update the site's look and feel, which Tony acknowledges has not kept up with modern web design.

Meanwhile, Tony's still picking away. But at least after five years of listening exclusively to bluegrass (to his wife's distress) he is now able to listen to other types of music. Over the years, he:

- supported Randy Black in promoting and running the Off Key Jam, which after many years has found a permanent home at Bidley McGraw's in Northeast Portland. They even created a song book, with lyrics and chords noted in the Nashville Numbering System, so everyone can follow along;
- started a band called Back Porch Revival, which continues to play around Portland. Tony said the band's first appearance made it obvious "we didn't play out." But they have improved and persevered -- and are still having a lot of fun;

- bought a baritone ukulele, so that when he went camping in the medieval atmosphere of Creative Anachronism events he could practice his banjo chords without seeming too much out of time and place (try to picture this, friends!);
- runs a nonprofit started by his dad. The Patient Physician Cooperative helps working people find affordable health care without third-party insurance coverage; and
- runs a business that develops, sells and supports software for health care providers.

Is that enough? Not for Tony.

"I've been teaching myself relief carving and inlays. I have every intention of being a luthier in my retirement -- not making instruments, but decorating them.

"I'm an artist -- if it has to do with creativity, I want to do it."

Theory of Bluegrass: Wet Paper Bag

By Matt Snook

Each of the bluegrass instruments has its own strengths and weaknesses. Flatpickers and fiddlers fly up and down the scale, playing intricate melodies as easy as breathing. But when it comes to arpeggios (chord patterns) and syncopation it's a different story: They struggle with cross-picking for guitar and mandolin or Hokum Bowing on fiddles, for instance, sweating to achieve what banjo pickers do while noodling.

For banjo and dobro, the opposite seems to be true. The rolls, chord patterns, and arpeggios come naturally to the three finger picker, but often the audience – or even the picker! – has a hard time hearing a melody through the barrage of notes. And that's while picking in the low country down by the nut. Up the neck things get even worse. Legion are the banjo and dobro pickers fairly proficient on the first four or five frets, but up the neck they find themselves limited to rolling over a chord shape or straight bar position and feeling like they couldn't pick their way out of a wet paper bag. Sound familiar? Read on.

Outside the Box

When Big Mon sang Little Georgia Rose, he sang it straight: "Way dooooooowwwwwnnnn, in the Blue Ridge Mountains, way doooooowwnnn, where the tall pines grow..." The melody stayed right there on the IV note during the long-held note on "down." Later, John Duffey of the Seldom Scene was thinking outside of the box when he sang: "Way doooooowww-hooooowwnnnnn in the Blue Ridge Mountains" yada, yada, yada. On "hown" he raised the note one step, singing a V note over a IV chord – a blasphemy which sounded so good it's been done that way ever since! Why not put it to work in your instrumental version? You'll see it's a great way to make short work of that bag...

Let's pick the banjo in G, to start out easy. This line of the song would be over the C chord, and Big Mon's melody note would be the C. The first line of tab in Figure 2 shows a standard Scruggs approach to picking this on a banjo using a forward roll. Ho-hum... Duffey's version would raise that C to the D note halfway through, and the second line in Figure 2 is a lame and tame way to put the extra note in your playing. But it's still not enough. Let's make people take notice of what we're doing!

There is a musical concept called enclosure which is a cool way to emphasize a note. We want to make that D note of the melody stand out – the way your hair stands up when Duffey sings it – so we'll enclose it by not just dwelling on the D note, but playing the notes above it and below as well. Line 3 shows a rather tepid way to do this. Notice that the E and C notes play a part in these standard banjo rolls, and you can bring out the melody by emphasizing the right notes with the right hand. But it's still not enough! Let's banjify this thing.

Instead of just picking the enclosing notes, which tends to bury them in the rolling sound, throw some pull-offs and slides in there to give it some zing! Line 4 is what I'm talking about. It starts with a typical roll, then uses a pull-off to go from E to D, followed immediately by a slide from the C to D. Whew! When you get through playing that phrase, everybody will be paying attention. Notice that the final measures also enclose the G note of the melody between the A and F# notes.

And Now The Bag

"Great," you say, "but we're still playing down at the nut." Hold your horses, we're this close to picking our way out of that bag. Let's pick it in C.

Line 5 shows how, with a little modification, we can pick this lick in any key. The example is in C, but there is no reason the same lick can't be played anywhere on the neck. The fingering is a little tricky, so in Figure 1 I've shown one way to do it. Remember this is just a suggestion; do what works for you.

You can use these two ideas – enclosure and emphasis – to remake each of your basic banjo licks to bring out the melody and break out of the first position down at the nut. Identify which note you want to emphasize, then find a way to play the scale notes just above and below, the way E and C enclose D. Add some zing by using pull-offs, hammers, slides, and all the other tricks in your wet paper bag.

Matt teaches banjo & dobro in Coos Bay, Corvallis and Portland, Oregon. Send messages to matt@greenbeard.us.

BLUEGRASS JAMMING CLASS

Calling all closet pickers!

TAUGHT BY PATRICK CONNELL USING THE WERNICK METHOD*

6 SESSIONS $175

Tuesdays, Oct 29–Dec 3 6–9pm
Portland, OR Private residence, NE Portland

Patrick Connell has played guitar in numerous bluegrass bands in the Pacific northwest, and teaches in the Portland area. He currently performs in a traditional bluegrass band, his father's Americana band, Whistlin' Rufus, and an instrumental trio with dobro and cello. He has performed at many festivals, picnics, bars, and weddings, and has a strong affinity for 3-chord bluegrass songs.

"Gets me excited about playing!"

"A tremendous teacher, skilled at conveying concepts that otherwise might be over my head."

"Clearly loves the music."

- All bluegrass instruments
- No jamming experience necessary
- You will be jamming the first session!

* Wernick Method Classes teach real bluegrass jamming!

* in your area * * with other pickers like you *

- * Hands-on learning in large and small groups
- * Learn many bluegrass standards
- * Gentle tempos! Mistakes expected
- * Full ground rules and etiquette of typical jams
- * How to lead songs and how to follow new songs
- * How to find melodies, fake solos, sing harmony
- * Ear skills taught and emphasized, as in real bluegrass
- * Tab/mote reading skills not needed or used
- * Group and individualized instruction on backup skills
- * Understanding, low-pressure, time-tested teaching!

DO YOU QUALIFY? It's easier than you may think! If you play guitar, mandolin, banjo, fiddle, bass, or dobro... you can be part of a bluegrass jam.

Only requirements: You must be able to tune your instrument (electronic tuning devices welcome) and change smoothly between G, C, D, and A. (Fiddles and basses need to know which notes work with which chords) Fast playing is not expected, nor is the ability to solo required.

Pete Wernick ("Dr. Banjo", originator of Banjo Camps and Bluegrass Jam Camps)

has created a method that has taught thousands worldwide how to fit into bluegrass music jams at their own level. Wernick Method teachers are personally certified by Pete based on their knowledge of bluegrass, teaching in general, and teaching bluegrass according to his methods.

Band Feature

Long Mountain Revival plays Gospel bluegrass music. Members hail from Prospect, Wimer, Eagle Point, Grants Pass and Central Point. Formed in 2007, they decided on the name “Long Mountain Revival” by 2010. That refers to a local mountain near Eagle Point, and “Revival” reflects their desire to see revival in the hearts of those they play for, as well as in their hearts to reach the lost. Their repertoire includes material from Doyle Lawson, Hot Rize, Hank Williams, Blue Highway, originals, and bluegrassified hymns. Song themes are Bible accounts, praise songs, stories of redemption, and spiritual truths. Long Mountain Revival is Bob Batte, Vicky McGee, Jay Moss, Bob Sullivan, Jerry Truppa, Mark Adams, and Jon Clement. Find them on Facebook and YouTube.

Beginning Bluegrass Jammer

by Greg Stone and Linda Leavitt

Why Learn to Play Bluegrass Music, Anyway?

Festivals, friends, camping under the stars, sharing great food and beautiful music from the heart in community: That's what bluegrass music is all about. Some of you would like to go beyond just listening to bluegrass at festivals and concerts. You've decided to learn to play a banjo, mandolin, fiddle, guitar or bass. Some of you are even singing for the first time. This column is for you.

Bluegrass music is good for body and soul

Playing bluegrass music is just plain good for you, with health benefits that include improved brain function, hand-eye coordination and finger strength, and lower blood pressure and stress. Music practice results in better memory and staves off dementia. Focused practice is meditative. Playing bluegrass music keeps us sharp and inspired.

Singing results in greater lung capacity, fewer colds (yes, really) and better posture.

Playing bluegrass music allows you to express yourself emotionally. Singing a sad song may improve your mood.

Friendship is good for you, too. People with good social connections live longer. That's a fact! To play well with others, you will develop your ear for listening to the music and to the folks with whom you play music. If you regularly play music with other folks, chances are you will make deep music connections and you might just live longer. So turn off that TV and get to practicing!

Playing bluegrass music is fun

Face it: You work too much! You need to find a diversion that totally engrosses you. Fiddle tunes and songs are like puzzles waiting to be solved. When you've mastered a fiddle tune or song that you can play in a jam, you will be solving that musical puzzle in concert with others. Bluegrass music is both an individual and a team sport. When you take a break in a jam, you may feel like you've hit a home run.

Make friends no matter where you are in the world

If you know how to play and sing bluegrass music, you will have learned a language that is recognized all over the world. Bluegrass music is very accessible, and everyone is welcome. If you find yourself at a bluegrass jam in Tokyo, Buenos Aires or Prague, you may need a translator to ask how to find the train station, but chances are excellent that everyone at that jam will know how to play "Old Joe Clark" with you.

The founder of bluegrass music, Bill Monroe, felt overwhelmed by the success of the music community he created. Monroe said, "Bluegrass music has brought more people together and made more friends than any music in the world."

What is the best way to learn to play and sing bluegrass music?

Find an instrument, a good teacher and learn to play your instrument.

Listen deeply to bluegrass music. Go back to the original material of the genre (Monroe, Stanley Brothers, Flatt & Scruggs, Del McCoury) and really listen to the rhythm, chord structure and the singing, too. Memorize tunes and songs. Join a regular weekly jam and play with other musicians at your level, and perhaps those who are farther along than you. Bluegrass musicians are by nature generous folks. Ask questions and ask for help! Practice 10 minutes in the morning and ten minutes in the evening. Join a group class. Join the Oregon Bluegrass Association!

Greg Stone teaches guitar and directs Taborgrass, a weekly bluegrass class and jam for all instruments (www.taborgrass.com) and performs in the GTM String Band. Linda Leavitt teaches at Taborgrass and sings with the bluegrass band Porch Cats.

Sound advice: Hints and tips on sounding your best with Mark Gensman, Ground Zero Sound

Hi again, folks. It seems the summer festival season was just starting and now here we are, nearly finished with nice weather and outdoor events. It just goes too fast.

This installment is not for musicians. I have been observing festival audiences and believe there is some "sound advice" that could help the audience have a better musical experience. In fact, I actually doubt that anyone has ever attempted to give advice to those who come out and support live music. So, I have my task.

Knowing a little bit about sound systems can make the listening experience more enjoyable for many folks. Frequently people will set their chairs right in front of the stage, thinking that is the best seat in the house. Other times, folks will sit as far away as they can and don't realize they too are losing some of the experience.

Those who sit right in front don't realize that most PA systems have low- or mid-frequency drivers and high-frequency horns of some type. The separate components each have their own characteristics and require a certain amount of distance from the speaker to work together. A front-row seat might be the worst place to sit if you really want to hear the band. The main speakers are aimed past where you are sitting, the horns can't cover your area, and you are hearing both the main speakers and the monitor speakers on stage.

In an ideal world, everyone would sit in the "sweet spot" of the PA system. That spot is always out in front of the main speakers a certain distance-- never in front of the speakers and never between the speakers close to the stage.

High-frequency horns radiate sound at an angle. Most radial horns send sound out at either sixty or ninety degrees from the front of the speaker.

Imagine the old-time cheer leader's voice tube (megaphone) with a small hole at one end and a large hole at the other. That is similar to how a high-frequency horn works.

There are times when the horns overlap each other, somewhere out in front. That can be a great place to sit, or it can be a terrible place to sit. Sometimes when a PA is not set up properly, the place where the two horns overlap can cause phase cancellation which can sound like mud. Imagine dropping a stone in a pool. Notice the water waves going away from the point of impact in nice concentric rings. Now, drop two stones a couple of feet apart and watch what happens. Where the two waves meet, they cancel each other out. That can happen where horns overlap.

Therefore, the ideal place to sit is a reasonable distance from the front of the speakers, anywhere within that ninety-degree triangle and far enough away for the low frequency drivers and the horns to couple and provide the best sound.

Another hint is to not sit next to the mixing station. Not that the sound is bad, but frequently people come to talk to the engineer. That can be distracting. If the talking bothers you, remember that the sound engineer can't get up and move. You can. There are times when a discussion of a band's sound needs must be held while another band is on stage. If that will bother you, sit far enough away to avoid being distracted.

And a final note about being an audience member. Most folks know that having good sound at an event is important. Be aware of where you sit. Try not to block the engineer's view of the stage. Try not to walk on cords or cables on the ground. While you are there to enjoy yourself, the sound guy is working hard to make your experience as enjoyable as possible.

And when in doubt, ask the sound guy where the best seats in the house are for the best sound. Who knows? Maybe they actually know the answer.

The Bluegrass Regulators

Luke Dewhirst, Martin Stevens, Molly Adkins, Josh Adkins, Jake Dewhirst

In February 2009, four young musicians got together and started playing. Something clicked. Drawing from a variety of influences such as The Lonesome River Band, Vince Gill, John Mayer, Hot Rize, and Buddy Miller, the Regulators deliver a unique blend of contemporary bluegrass, complete with solid instrument and vocal work

Fadin' By 9

What happens when you bring together a bass-playing attorney, guitar-strumming bilingual reading specialist, fire-on-the-fiddle volcanologist, and a banjo-picking elementary school principal? Correct if you circled "c) Fadin' by 9" . With hot pickin', tight harmonies, and a mix of "bluegrassified" rock, folk, and bluegrass covers & originals, Fadin' by 9 creates a unique, uplifting, high-energy sound.
