MEET MATT RUHLAND Luthier/Musician/Nice Guy

By Tammy Spears

Portland, Oregon has a jewel within its midst: Matt Ruhland. Matt can be seen playing banjo in local jams, bands, and bluegrass festivals. But nationally, he is making a name for himself as a gifted luthier. Part I of this article will introduce you to the multi-talented Matt Ruhland. Part II will give you an inside glimpse of his small-batch mandolins from a customer and associate perspective.

Part I The Musician

Matt grew up in rural Memphis and has fond memories of riding his bike “all over the place.” But as an adult, the heat, humidity and geographic location of Memphis enticed him to find new frontiers. In 2006 he sold his home, packed his belongings and hit the road. Having canvassed the U.S., he gravitated toward the Pacific NW to check out the home base of his musical heroes Caleb Klauder (Foghorn Stringband) and David Pugh (Jackstraw). Matt said that as he crossed through Walla Walla, Washington and drove into the gorge, he knew that he would live in Portland. In fact, during that drive he was so excited that he stopped his car and jumped into the John Day River, symbolizing the immersion into his new home. Having already played banjo (but mostly rock guitar) in Memphis, his first music jam in Portland was the Alberta Street Pub’s bluegrass jam where he met many of the friends he holds dear today. Not only a talented multi-instrumentalist (banjo, mandolin, guitar), Matt also sings; he recently performed in 3-part a capella harmony at the OBA’s Pickersfest. Locally you can catch him playing in the Portland-based Rowdy Mountain band.

The Luthier

Before leaving Memphis, Matt worked in the construction industry restoring old homes. Upon moving to Portland, Matt reconnected with a childhood friend and the two decided to build custom furniture. Since this endeavor was slow to develop, Matt found himself repairing and “tinkering with” violins and other small instruments. Working with small instruments was a natural fit. A good friend, past bandmate and fine woodworker, Jason Brooks (Minor Lee Woodworks), planted the seed of working in production, and in 2014 Matt took the plunge into building mandolins as a career. As Matt said, “At that time, I owned a nice Crafters of Tennessee A5 mandolin. I had been eyeing some F5s, but with the banjo as my primary instrument, I couldn’t justify that purchase. It made sense to me to start building with the F5. Baptism by fire, and why not?” Thus, the first F5 Ruhland mandolin was born, No. 0 or “Test,” which Matt still owns today.

Founded in 1982, the Oregon Bluegrass Association (OBA) is a volunteer-run, 501(c) (3), non-profit arts organization consisting of individual and band memberships. Based in Portland, Oregon, the OBA has chapters in Salem and Roseburg, and is the umbrella organization for the Chick Rose School of Bluegrass.

The OBA is led by an elected Board of Directors who volunteer for two-year terms. Monthly meetings are open to all members and an Annual Meeting is held for the state-wide and regional members. Financial support for the OBA comes from membership dues, fundraising events, tax-deductible donations, merchandise sales and advertising revenue from the Bluegrass Express, the award-winning member newsletter.

President's Message

"You're upping your game," a longtime friend and OBA member said to me recently. That's exactly what we hope people are saying as we roll into 2020.

Bluegrass music is expanding in our state, if the number of active bands is any indication—we're up to 18 OBA member bands and still growing—and we are finishing up 2019 with a new web radio station, a new concert series, and stronger ties and support for our existing programs and activities.

Best of all, we're seeing you getting out, getting involved, becoming members and volunteers, and spreading bluegrass around. Thank you all!

One quick way to get plugged in is to attend one of our quarterly public Directors' meetings (none of our Board's meetings are closed to members, but since July we have been scheduling a meeting each quarter in a public location to encourage members to get to know us and give us feedback). The next one will be at 7 p.m. on February 11, 2020 at Max's Fanno Creek Brew Pub in Tigard. Please join us.

The next few months are going to be an exciting time for the OBA. We've got three Bluegrass Special concerts between January and March—the Sonny Hammond Memorial Gospel Show with the Kathy Kallick Band plus Cliff Perry & Laurel Bliss on January 25, Chris Jones and the Night Drivers on February 8, and Missy Raines on March 21.

Right in the middle is Wintergrass, from February 20-23. If you thought the OBA Suite was over the top last year, wait until you see what Patrick Connell is cookin' up for the 2020 OBA showcases. Plus jams, the silent auction, and seeing all your new best friends.

We are donors in support of Wintergrass. As always, we are grateful for your financial contribution. It's quick and easy with the donation button on our web site.

And don't forget the superb concerts featuring the best local artists with our partners Multnomah Grange 71 on January 11, February 8, and March 14.

It's a lot to put on your calendar, but don't worry, the OBA Calendar on our web site has you covered. Stop by next time you're clicking on the Listen to OBA Radio button.

One final thought: Just over the horizon is the OBA Annual Meeting on April 5 at the Multnomah Arts Center. It's more than a fine time with good pals; we will be electing a slate of Directors and announcing this year's Steve Waller Grant recipients.

If you're interested in upping your game as a volunteer by serving as a Director, contact me at president@oregonbluegrass.org. I'd love to have that conversation with you.

And now's the time to apply for the OBA's helping hand as a Waller Grant recipient. Our web site has everything you need to apply.

So, until we meet again, please accept my humble thanks for your membership and support.

Chris
OBA President

Commencement of Ruhland Mandolin No. 42 for Tammy Spears

Matt fondly recalls his first trip to Orcas Island where he met the famed Bruce Harvie who has over 40 years of experience marketing tone woods. The knowledge, sound advice, and builder references Mr. Harvie generously provided were invaluable to the young luthier and has shaped the way Ruhland mandolins are made. Chuck Holloway (musician and owner of a Ruhland mandolin No. 20) recently commented, “Matt got it right, right from the start.” Well said, as early Ruhland mandolins are known for their tone and volume.

In contrast to its classical European roots, the mandolin has become best known in the U.S. for its appearance in bluegrass, country and old-time music. Ruhland offers two American-style models: the almond-shaped A5, and the F5 with scroll and points. Although inspired by the early Gibson/Loar mandolins, Matt also draws inspiration from past and present builders including Sullivan and Gilchrist. Matt’s building philosophy is to draw from the old, but always search for new and improved methods. For example, where some luthiers have a calculated “recipe” for voicing the instrument, Matt feels that each instrument should prescribe its own voicing. Finishing is also a unique process; Matt uses a non-toxic spirit varnish he concocts from 190 Proof White

Matt’s Take on Mandolin Maintenance

There are so many things that contribute to the tone, volume and playability of a mandolin. I encourage players to learn as much as they can about caring for their instruments, and to share with other pickers. Ultimately, though, don’t hesitate to check in with a pro for maintenance.

As seasons change, mandolins will take on or lose moisture rapidly, because these carved plates have a lot of exposed endgrain. Keep an eye on your action, and make bridge adjustments accordingly. After any adjustment or string change, always make sure your bridge foot is flat on the top, and not tanking toward the fretboard. Fret wear can also sneak up on you. If you do get a little buzzing, and a bridge adjustment isn’t quite the answer, it might be time to check in with someone for a fret dressing.

Please learn what your mandolin finish is. There are different polishes and methods of care for finishes from nitrocellulose lacquer to spirit varnish. Polishes for nitrocellulose will dissolve spirit varnish. You should check into Jubilee Polish for shellac-based finishes. For the most part, a soft cloth is all you need to clean most finishes. Direct sun on a black case at a summer festival can roast a finish, or make it check horribly. Always be cautious there. If you are buying a new case, and you’re a festival goer, buy a white one, please!

I’ve seen a trend in playing with heavy strings. Your standard issue J74s should be fine for most builds. If you load up with those heavy strings, I’ve noticed that the tops don’t vibrate as freely with all that added pressure. There’s a serious balance going on, and little things like that can rob you of tone.

If you think you just have to have a pickup, go watch Andrew Marlin play with Mandolin Orange. His 1924 Loar will be the loudest thing in that full band, and he’s playing into a Sure Beta 57. Also, check out Caleb Klauder’s Country Band for another properly miked tone generator. That Sullivan F5 punches right through! I think the pads in most pickup setups take the brilliance away from a mandolin top. The area between the tone bar and the edge of the F-hole is very important for brilliance. Please reconsider!

Does your banjo have an overly bright or harsh sound? Do other musicians cringe at your attempts to blend in musically? In my many years of doing professional banjo setup, I have found this tone problem to be common with traditionally constructed banjos. Typical banjo sound contains a high overtone content. To explain further, the thin responsive head on the banjo allows the strings' sub-vibrations, or overtones, to become audible. The high harmonic content of the banjo's sound in fact defines the unique quality of the banjo's sound.

Even if your banjo is loud, it doesn't necessarily mean that it is sounding its best. Often the loudness of a banjo contains a large measure of "noise." The heavy metal-laden banjo machine tends to serve up more than its share of high-frequency resonance, and compounded with discordant harmonics, we have a recipe for a harsh cold sound.

Naturally, we all have slightly different ideas of good sound, but among serious musicians, most favor a certain warmth of tone. The secret to finding this warm quality in your banjo is to try to free up some of its lower frequencies while controlling its high overtones from becoming overpowering. The most pleasant tones to the human ear tend to be in the medium- to lower-frequency range. Most banjos are capable of producing these frequencies, but they are often choked off by a setup that is too tight and which restricts the banjo's bass potential. When bass is present, it rounds out the sound and helps buffer the high frequency noise. I hope the following information will assist in achieving even and balanced tone on whatever style of banjo you have.

If you have a Heli-mount style banjo, perfectly even tension is automatically applied to the banjo head. Helical Head mounting replaces upwards of 70 pieces of metal hardware, and mounts the tone components independent of direct metal contact, producing fuller, deeper, and more even tone with less work. Detailed setup advice follows for adding a musical warmth, especially for those with traditional hook-and-nut style banjos.

Heads

So how do we encourage the bass and control the noise? The common first remedy is to loosen the head. I won't go into detail about how to do this, since if you are reading this, I must assume you have the tool and know-how for that. I'd suggest using the right size nut driver, usually 1/4". Make sure all nuts have equal tension and the tension hoop remains straight. If the instrument loses too much volume or brilliance with a looser head, you may want to experiment with different types of heads.

Some players of overly bright banjos have installed a Fiberskyn head. This is a simulated natural skin-looking head that is a little thicker. It can be an effective way to muffle the highest frequencies and it is a particularly common replacement head on Stelling banjos. We are always walking a tightrope with adjustments on a banjo. The danger is that the Fiberskyn may cause the instrument to sound lifeless and dull. If you tighten the head too much, you might choke off the musicality altogether, especially with 11-inch heads. In most bluegrass banjos, I prefer a Renaissance head or a regular frosted head. 5-Star heads seem a little heavier but tend to sound a little colder and brighter than standard Remo frosted heads. Clear heads, which can be sharp and edgy in a traditional banjo, sound their best evenly tight or helically mounted. More to come on banjo heads next time.

Bridges

The banjo bridge is a source of much myth and misunderstanding. There are many features to the bridge that can distract from or add to optimal banjo sound. It's important to pay attention to the following bridge features to help limit unwanted noise, yet allow ample volume:

Bridge Weight

This is perhaps the most crucial factor in bridges. Most bridges I see on bluegrass banjos are a little too light to deliver a warm tone. While light, thin bridges translate the string vibration into a bright sound, they also allow audible responsiveness to every overtone imaginable. On 5-string banjos, the bridge should weigh no less than two grams, and under three grams. Let me also add a note on bridge density: Harder maple with many growth lines produces a brighter sound than softer maple with grain lines about 1/8" apart.

String Slots

If the string slots are not cut to fit the string snugly, or if the front edge of the slot is too deep, noise can occur. A bridge with a wide ebony top for extra weight, and longer contact area between the string and the bridge, is the most effective. Be sure the playing side of the string slot makes sharp, intimate contact with the string for clean tone.

Bridge Height

With a hook-and-nut style banjo, it is important to use only the bridge height which is optimal for the instrument. This can vary slightly with each banjo. Different heights will produce different tone results, but changing the bridge height obviously affects the string action and resulting playability. It's recommended to avoid over-tightening of the banjo's coordinator rods to force a banjo to accept a different height bridge. This can cause unwanted stresses, bad sound, and potential damage to the banjo pot. This can also contribute to harshness and unwanted bass constriction. To find the proper height, remove the strings, loosen the coordinator nuts by the tailpiece side of the rim, check the evenness of head tension, tighten the neck to the rim first, and then hand-tighten the nuts on the tailpiece side of the rim. Then re-string the banjo and find a bridge high enough so no strings rattle or buzz anywhere on the neck.

Tailpieces

Another important part that should be considered when attempting to warm up a banjo's sound is its tailpiece. This part exerts the downward pressure of the strings on the bridge and head. Just as it is important to determine a banjo's "natural" bridge height, it is also necessary to seek a tailpiece position that is rigid, yet which allows the natural vibration of the bridge and head.

There is always an interplay of offsetting factors, but the following guidelines are generally true: With 5/8" bridges I like to fasten the Presto tailpiece rigidly down until its underside just touches the tension hoop. Then with strings on, and a little more tightening of the tailpiece nut, the body of the tailpiece will start to point up toward the top of the bridge. Of course, the higher the bridge, the higher the tailpiece should be. If there is a screw in the end of the tailpiece, I would remove it so that there is solid contact between the tailpiece and the side of the tension hoop. Kershner and Price tailpieces are a bit more solid so they allow for a little more leeway in how they are set up. For example, they can be off the top of the tension hoop a little and be parallel to the head, or even pointing up a little.

Beware of too much choking down at the tailpiece. If you need to crank down on the tailpiece to get any life out of the instrument, you probably have other weak links in the banjo system that should be addressed first.

Nechville and Stelling tailpieces are pre-set by their anchoring points on the tension hoop, but still allow some down pressure adjustment. These tailpieces also give a bit of side-to-side adjustment for string centering.

Strings

Light gauge strings, .009, .011, .012, .020 wound, .009 are typical on bright bluegrass banjos and usually sound great. If you are shooting for a darker or warmer sound, try this set: .010, .012, .014, .022 wound, .010.

Summary

Whenever working on your banjo, remember that small changes add up to a combined result that is often quite noticeable. When facing a choice for which adjustments to make to warm your sound, opt for making several small adjustments rather than one large one. Banjos usually respond better to many minute adjustments rather than to one drastic one.

Meet Matt Ruhland

Batch Eight of A5 mandolins

Lightning grain alcohol (yeah, you could drink it), tree resins and organic shellac. Matt also states that he is not a big fan of electronic pickups or heavy strings, believing that they take away the natural tone of the instrument.

Tight quality control is achieved because Ruhland is, and will remain, a one-man operation. No time for loneliness though, as Matt enjoys visits from customers and fellow musicians checking out his shop. He always seems to find time to chat and answer questions.

Matt is creating Batch Nine of F5-style Ruhland mandolins. You can find more information about Ruhland mandolins at Matt's website, ruhlandmandolins.com

Part II Customers and Associates Tammy Spears, Portland, Oregon

I started chatting with Matt in the fall of 2018 about building a semi-custom Ruhland A5 mandolin. By April 2019, Batch Eight commenced of eight Ruhland A5

mandolins (No. 36 to No. 43). Mine was No. 42. I've photo-documented and oged over every step of the build from picking out the blocks of wood to applying the finish. The entire process was interesting, exciting, and fun. Matt's kind and jovial persona is great. And since Matt is a musician, he has a natural sense of sound, playability, and what a musician wants from an instrument.

In this age of mass produced "throw-away" goods, for me it is refreshing and inspirational to own a custom, handmade mandolin from a local builder. Or, as a friend says, "You have an instrument with a soul." Now comes the fun part of getting some playwear on my new Ruhland mandolin. It truly is a work of art with "bell" quality tone that I will eternally enjoy.

Reed Stutz, Berklee School of Music, Boston, Massachusetts

I'm really happy with my Ruhland mandolin, No. 23. I have lots of fun playing it, dancing with its woody tone and strong presence. It's got a unique character that I was fond of right off the bat, and I keep seeing it has more to show me. I'm real grateful Matt is doing what he's doing and glad to have him and my Ruhland mandolin No. 23 as partners. Heck yeah for local builders doing cool things.

Josh Levine, Portland, Oregon

I own Ruhland No. 30, an A5 model and one of the first instruments he made with the old Alaskan Sitka from a decommissioned bridge. It is an amazing instrument, louder than any instrument I've owned, and I own some loud instruments. It plays incredibly easy and amazingly, has no dead spots. I get great tone and volume way up the neck. I've been watching Matt as a builder from pretty early on, somewhere around No.10, I think. It was clear to me that he knew how to get great tone out of an instrument. When you walk into his house, you immediately see slats of wood curing. He really is completely obsessed with building mandolins, which is great, since I like playing mandolins. Such a treat to have him living down the street. When I saw his first batch of A5 models and got to play No. 29 and No. 30, I finally bit the bullet and picked one up. He really has refined his craft and it seems every instrument he builds has it. I just played his most recent batch of A5s and they are amazing too. I was slightly envious, but I love my Ruhland A.

Matt is also a really great guy. One of my favorite things about Matt, other than his mandolins, is if you are ever at a late-night festival jam with him, at some point he busts out a massive cast-iron skillet and cooks pork chops or steaks mid-jam and shares them with everyone. Mandolins and pork chops – now that is a key to my heart.

George Gruhn, owner, Gruhn Guitars, Nashville, Tennessee

“I recently had the occasion to borrow a Matt Ruhland F5-style mandolin from Dennis Benjamin for a weekend, which gave me the opportunity to play it at my shop, at home, and take it backstage to the Opry and show it to a number of prominent artists, where it was well received. I was favorably impressed with its workmanship, playability, materials, and sound. There are more makers today producing high-quality mandolins suitable for bluegrass music than probably at any time in the instrument’s history. In my opinion, Ruhland mandolins warrant attention from serious musicians.”

Bruce Harvie, owner, Orcas Island Tonewoods

“I see all the new builders when they come here for tonewood, so I have a pretty interesting front-row seat in the emerging mandolin-building community. A lot of them show me their latest, and all I can really offer is ‘nice wood!’ I built about 25 instruments back in the 70s and 80s, and that would certainly be the critique of my own work!”

“When Matt showed up here, he had an early F5 copy with him, and it really had a great sound. I had a few comments on the arching and a couple other details, but you could really tell he was onto something. When he showed up again a year or so later, he had really dialed it in. I’d say he is right up there with just about any of the newer breed I’ve run into in the last 15 years or so. And not only did he “get there,” but he got there quickly.”

Greg Boyd, owner, Greg Boyd’s House of Fine Instruments, Missoula, Montana

“We’re excited to be a dealer for Matt Ruhland’s mandolins. In fact, we’ve been “all in” after meeting Matt and hearing the first one a few years ago. Rarely are new makers

Greg had this to say about the latest Ruhland A5 that is for sale at his shop: “This is a spirit-varnished, sunburst beauty. The back and sides are constructed from Western Big Leaf Maple with excellent bookmatched back. The neck is 2-piece figured Sugar Maple. The Maple figure is very beautiful with strong figure everywhere. The top is a special hard Sitka Spruce (or possibly a Lutz hybrid) from Ketchikan, Alaska, aged over 25 years. Matt says this special Sitka Spruce is harder and much more resonant than much of the Red Spruce that is available today. Snakehead peghead has blackened back and Ebony veneer face with Ruhland logo in pearl inlay at top, pearl and abalone flowerpot in center. Ebony radiused fingerboard with gold EVO frets and pearl dot position markers. Traditional two-piece adjustable intonated bridge; silver James tailpiece with Ruhland engraved in the cover; ebony end pin; and nickel Rubner tuners with ivoroid buttons. The entire mandolin is bound with multiple ivoroid bindings, with multiple lines seen at sides of peghead, sides of fingerboard, and top and back edges of body. The sound is easy to describe – just picture in your mind your idea of a great-sounding mandolin. This one sounds better than that and sounds like it should be priced much higher.”

able to produce such mature-sounding instruments, but Matt has done it consistently time after time. We see such a variety of instruments come through the shop that we can quickly sniff out if someone is making quality instruments consistently, and Ruhland is a quality instrument. We have already sold several to experienced players that know what a good mandolin should sound like. Matt’s refinement of traditional building methods and use of high-grade materials puts him near the front of the line of mandolin makers in my

Musician Interview: Amy Hakanson

By Roz Hamar

If you have never seen Amy Hakanson play fiddle or nyckelharpa, you have a real treat in store! I first heard her play with her band Varelse at ScanFair in December 2018, and I became an instant devoted fan. This past May, Varelse released their first CD at Gastro Mania in Portland's Multnomah Village to a standing-room-only enthusiastic crowd. I play the CD often in my car and never tire of the lovely haunting tunes. More recently she joined the band Big Dickens with a last-minute invitation to play fiddle. Though she had not rehearsed with them, she was a wonderful addition, taking breaks on every tune and doing a vocal lead.

I was truly honored to be asked to interview Amy and write this article for the OBA Bluegrass Express. We met for coffee and I began by asking her to tell me the story about how she became a musician. As many of you know, Amy comes from a super-talented musical family. Her grandmother, father, mother, brother and sister are all accomplished musicians and Amy got an early start. When her sister Ellie started taking violin lessons at age 6, Amy — then age two — demanded her own fiddle. Her mother, Kathy Hakanson, was her first teacher, initially with a violin made from a cereal box, and then with a 1/16th-size real violin. By age three Amy asked for a “real” teacher and began Suzuki lessons with Elisa Boynton.

At age five, her father, Rob Hakanson, began to teach her simple fiddle tunes like Ashokan Farewell, Flop-Eared Mule, and Boil Them Cabbage Down. Then Dad organized the family into a band for the Columbia Gorge Bluegrass Festival (today called GorgeGrass) in Stevenson, Washington. Dad played guitar and the two girls played fiddle. They performed “Keep on the Sunny Side” in the vocal competition and Amy sang harmony. This launched a period of years when the family band (which also included Mom on standup bass) became regulars at bluegrass festivals in the region – Hood River, Tillamook, Wenatchee, Prospect, Port Angeles, and Seattle's Wintergrass. They continued to play together until Ellie went off to college.

By then, Amy was in high school and continued to pursue her love of music, but now with an intent to explore and play instruments other than the fiddle. She learned to play electric guitar, acoustic guitar, mandolin and banjo and enjoyed these challenges.

In the winter of 2008, Amy was at Wintergrass and had an opportunity to see the band Väsen. This was her introduction to Swedish music and she loved it! She has never looked back. She bought one of their albums and then another, listening to them often. By the time she was 18, she was listening to more and more Scandinavian folk bands. A friend from a radio station gave her 30 CDs and Amy fell in love with this music. She especially loved the nyckelharpa. At the same time, she decided she wanted to study abroad and took a trip to Iceland that further hooked her on the idea of travel and learning.

Amy's search for a nyckelharpa led her to instrument maker Earl Holzman in Wisconsin. He just happened to have a nyckelharpa he had made a few years earlier and he offered to sell it to her at a discount. She had already saved money for such a purchase and was able to raise another $1000 on Go Fund Me. Her nyckelharpa arrived before Wintergrass 2014. Väsen was playing again that year and Amy took a workshop from them. Olov Johansson encouraged her to go to the Erik Sahlström Institute in Tobo, Uppsala, Sweden. Amy worked three jobs to save enough money, combined with parent help, to go from August 2014 to May 2015. On her way there she was able to travel to Iceland, England and around Sweden, and attend a Swedish Festival in Korro where she made friends and was introduced to folk dance which is an integral part of the Swedish folk music scene. At the Sahlström Institute, Amy was able to study and play with some of the best in the world. Her time was devoted to playing all day and every day in classes that were interspersed with coffee breaks (“fika”) and meals. There were twenty students in attendance – half playing instruments and half learning dances. On occasion, the musicians and dancers would get together so the players could learn to dance and to play for the dancers. Half of the students were Swedish and the rest came from all over the world – United States, Denmark, Norway, Japan, England, Switzerland, Germany and Finland.

Amy was drawn to Scandinavian music because of the fiddle, an instrument that is central to many folk traditions around the world. The nyckelharpa is idiosyncratic to Uppsala, while other parts of Sweden have their own special instruments. Amy's family comes from an area in Sweden (Skåne) where wooden shoe fiddles were popular. In fact, Amy learned that folk music was not well regarded in Sweden for some time in the 1800s. It was seen as devilish. Dancing and fiddling were especially seen as sinful.

Ironically, the music of Sweden was wonderful for Amy and diving into it revitalized her interest in the fiddle. Most of the work Amy gets these days is for playing the fiddle, but her first love is the nyckelharpa. She describes it as a cross between a hurdy-gurdy and a fiddle. Scandinavian music and bluegrass have some similarities. Amy can hear them in the songs her grandmother plays. Some Scandinavian music morphed into American bluegrass and old-time music. In Swedish music there are no breaks and less singing, and also no guitars. Bluegrass places more emphasis on virtuosity and players take solos and improvise. Amy loves to play bluegrass, old time, country and jazz. She old Swedish texts, and return to Sweden in Summer 2020. After graduation, she hopes to spend more time with her band and pursue grants in her areas of special interest. Her vision for 10 years out is to be doing more of what she loves and making a living doing it!

We wish her all success in accomplishing her dreams.

Roz Hamar retired in 2015 from years of Montessori school leadership, moved from the Bay Area to Portland (where she grew up), took up her guitar and found her way to Tabgrass and the Oregon Bluegrass Association.

is not fond of competitions or recitals and prefers to play in low-pressure situations where she can enjoy the music and the other musicians.

Until a year ago, Amy was studying Music Therapy at Marylhurst University. She was disheartened when their program folded. Now she is studying Ethnomusicology at Portland State University where she expects to graduate in spring 2020. She is also learning to build instruments and would love to build a nyckelharpa, using

Kathy Kallick Band – Horrible World

Live Oak Records, www.kathykallick.com

Guitarist and singer Kathy Kallick has hailed from the San Francisco Bay area since 1973. For about twenty years (1975-95), she was with The Good Ol' Persons until they disbanded.

In 1999, she formed The Kathy Kallick Band. In 2009, fiddler Annie Staninec and bassist Greg Booth joined her band that also includes Cary Black (bass) and Tom Bekeny (mandolin). Kathy and the band have been quite busy and prolific with several album releases over the years. "Horrible World" continues to show the eclectic nature of this group.

There are a half dozen Kathy Kallick originals (e.g., "Ride Away," "Pockets Full of Rain," "The Sunday Road") and a self-penned instrumental from Tom Bekeny ("Edale"). A tip of the hat to traditional music includes covers of Bill Monroe's bluesy "Dark as the Night" and A.P. Carter's "My Honey Lou." Featuring Greg Booth's Dobro, "Boot Heel Drag" has a nice Western Swing feel. Besides solid song selection and arrangement, the band offers straightforward picking and good harmony.

"Horrible World" is another engaging and tastefully rendered project from the Kathy Kallick Band.

Editor's Note: The Kathy Kallick Band will perform January 25, 2020 at the OBA Sonny Hammond Memorial Gospel Show. "Horrible World" CDs will be available at the show.

Joe Ross, from Roseburg, Oregon, picks mandolin with the Umpqua Valley Bluegrass Band. He can be reached at rossjoe@hotmail.com.

OBA Steve Waller Memorial Fund

History

In honor of his significant contributions to music and the Oregon Bluegrass Association (OBA), the Steve Waller Memorial Fund (the Fund) was established after Steve's passing in June 2015. The purpose of the Fund is to honor Steve through awarding financial grants to deserving individuals, to further their education, professional growth, or the advancement, preservation or support of bluegrass music.

Resources supporting the Waller Fund include: OBA general account funds, donations from the Oregon bluegrass community, and, potentially, grants received from various other organizations. OBA's goal is to receive enough support to endow the Waller fund, so that the principal balance remains intact in perpetuity, and regular earnings support annual grant awards. Until that point is achieved, OBA will strive to maintain financial resources to award funds deemed sufficient for recipients.

OBA administers the Waller Fund. Grant awards may vary in amount, and may be awarded to one or more recipients. OBA's Waller Fund Committee will review applications and recommend award recipient(s) and amount(s) to the OBA Board of Directors for final approval. The OBA aims to present the award annually at the Annual Meeting in April.

Scope

Steve Waller Memorial Fund grants will be awarded annually to individuals or groups with involvement in the Oregon Bluegrass community. The OBA Waller Fund Committee will consider all requests received through completion of the Waller Grant Application Form by the due date.

Criteria

1. Applicant(s) must be an Oregon Bluegrass Association member (individual or band) and the primary award recipient must be an Oregon resident.
2. Applicants must have a stated financial need.
3. Applicants may request funds for musical tuition or lessons, professional development, or the advancement of the bluegrass genre.
4. Applicants must complete and submit the Waller Grant Application Form by the due date.
5. Applications may not be submitted by a current OBA Board Member or relative.
6. Grant award payments will be made by OBA to the entity designated on the Waller Grant Application Form.
7. OBA may revise the criteria and Waller Fund application process from time to time, as needed.

Use Of Funds

1. Awards are intended to be used within the OBA's mission statement to "promote, encourage, foster, and cultivate the preservation, appreciation, understanding, enjoyment, support, and performance of bluegrass and other closely related music."
2. Awards are to be used within the one-year grant cycle and the Grant Use Summary Form to be completed by June of the year following the award.
3. Submit the form by March 1 to wallerapplication@oregonbluegrass.org or mail by mail to the OBA.
4. Recipients of the award may be asked to present their use of the award at the OBA general membership meeting held annually in April. If awardees are unable to present in person, a statement may be prepared.

Thank You and Good Luck!

Waller Grant Experience

by Jane Rombouts

I have been a bluegrass fan for decades and a faithful listener to KBOO radio's "Music from the True Vine" on Saturday mornings for years. One Saturday morning, KBOO announced the OBA Pickers Retreat in ZigZag. On a lark, I went there for the day. I had a fantastic time and was introduced to the Northwest bluegrass community. After that day, I started attending TaborGrass with my fiddle. I augmented my home practice with random YouTube videos. I have always loved singing but felt my voice was not all it could be.

I applied for the Waller Grant to help with some focused work on my singing and fiddling. Part of my decision on how to invest the grant money was based on fitting instruction into my already busy life. I decided to try online instruction for fiddling because the format offers so much flexibility. I chose Artist Works fiddle with Darol Anger. For vocal instruction, I decided to work with Darcy Dillon. Darcy has performed with Portland Opera and teaches conveniently close to my home. I worked diligently with the online fiddle instruction that allowed me to dig in later in the evenings when I had time. Darol Anger's program covered a huge variety of topics such as double stops, variations on licks, bowing, and chopping, just to mention a few. I focused on a particular area of fiddling for a couple weeks at a time. Darol Anger's program also includes sections on Blues and Jazz. Dipping into both of those areas has really helped increase my break repertoire.

I learned SO much about singing working one-on-one with Darcy. She taught me about my breathing, my jaw, projection, enunciation, how to protect my voice, and how to pair my singing with others. I completely relearned how to sing and how to think about singing. Darcy pushed me to focus on technique, providing me with voice exercises, instruction, and feedback. Working with her one-on-one helped me improve my singing in ways I never would have been able to achieve on my own.

I was fortunate to have been awarded the Waller Grant; thank you, OBA! I learned styles and techniques in singing and fiddling that will help me improve and continue to carry me forward, a direct result of the Waller Grant. It was a wonderful opportunity to improve my bluegrass musicianship and it helped me really engage at a new level with music as a grounding and joyful part of my life. I am a markedly improved musician with much more to contribute to our local bluegrass family. Gracious thanks again to the OBA!

A Voice For Change: Justin Hiltner Talks Bluegrass

by Nora Candey

Justin Hiltner is a Nashville-based banjo player and songwriter. His playing, though firmly based in Scruggs, is innovative and he thinks outside the box while still maintaining a traditional aesthetic. In his eight years in Music City, he's toured, performed, and collaborated with such bluegrass greats as Laurie Lewis, Roland White, Jim Lauderdale, Ronnie McCoury, and Molly Tuttle. Justin is an active part of the national bluegrass community, as a professional banjo player and also as Associate Editor for The Bluegrass Situation. He has taught throughout his career, including private lessons and camps such as Laurie Lewis's Bluegrass in the Gorge at Menucha. In August 2018 he released a collaborative album called "Watch It Burn" with Jon D. Weisberger, which features 11 original songs co-written by Justin and Jon, and an all-star cast including Molly Tuttle, Tim O'Brien, Kimber Ludiker, Tristan Scroggins, Casey Campbell, Brandon Godman, Corrina Logston, Amanda Fields, Vickie Vaughn, and Ellie Hakanson. Justin's performance on "A Tribute to the Kentucky Colonels" by Roland White and Friends led to an award nomination.

In 2016, Justin was nominated for the IBMA's Instrumentalist Momentum Award. As a songwriter, he has been featured in the IBMA Official Songwriter Showcase. Justin has his own band, the Justin Hiltner Band, and is working on his first solo album. Justin is a progressive champion of the under-represented and marginalized in bluegrass, and produced the first-ever diversity showcase in bluegrass, now an annual event at IBMA's business conference. He is a powerful voice for change and inclusion in the community, and sharp as a tack when it comes to knowledge of all things bluegrass. Over the past couple years, Justin and I have gotten to be pen pals, and I'd always wanted to interview him. When the opportunity came up, I jumped at it. What follows is a sort of "everything I always wanted to know about Justin but was afraid to ask," and I hope the readers will enjoy his unique perspective on the bluegrass world.

Interview

BGE: Can you tell me about your beginnings with bluegrass and the 5-string banjo? Why banjo? What piqued your interest, how did that interest develop, and what kept you on the path? What were your early influences and reasons for wanting to make this music your life?

Justin: As a child, I was watching a video of a musical show that included a bluegrass band and it had a joke about Jesus going on vacation. I remembered that much of the story, but I didn't know the name of the show until recently, when a friend googled the information I remembered and discovered it was Cotton Patch Gospel, a satirical 1980s retelling of the Christian gospel, in a bluegrass musical style. That show made me want to play the banjo. I was six years old. Wild. But it's kind of perfect, you know? This is how bluegrass works. This is especially how the banjo and three-finger style work.

They capture people's attention, their imagination, and almost force follow-up, discovery, and rapt adoration.

I distinctly remember my parents telling me, "If you still want to play banjo in a year, we'll get you a banjo." I also remember meeting a banjo player at a church service — the faith tradition throughline in this story is only occurring to me right now, in telling this — and he asked me to stretch out my hand against his. Of course, my tiny six-year-old hand was nothing compared to his. He told my parents something about how I wasn't big enough to play it yet. That might have factored into their having me wait a year, if not just to try to dissuade a young kid from a whim like a banjo.

Spoiler alert: I still wanted a banjo. I started on a piece of literal junk. The resonator was screwed onto the banjo with one giant flathead screw on the exact BACK of the resonator. I couldn't even reach the tuning pegs. When I started lessons, I learned to read tablature; probably the first four or five years were just reading tab. But what really got me into bluegrass, kept me going, showing me the kind of expansive horizons of the music, was when I started going to jam sessions. Jamming forced me to improvise. The jammers encouraged me in a safe and supportive way. They became my first example of the inseparable community aspect of bluegrass.

The final nail in the coffin for me wanting to do this for a living was being in a family band with my brothers — "The Hiltner Brothers." Yes, so original. We started playing "shows," when I was about ten. Performing was my favorite thing in the world. I was one of those kids who thought the spotlight was on me all the time, but definitely thrived when it was actually true.

BGE: What do you feel made the difference between being a banjo hobbyist/enthusiast, and becoming a professional musician? What sacrifices did you have to make, what epiphanies did you have along the way, and what wisdom have you learned that you can pass on to aspiring bluegrass musicians?

A Voice For Change: Justin Hiltner Talks Bluegrass

Justin: I had a reckoning with myself after my first year of college where I asked myself what I wanted to do for a living. My plan had been to get a degree in music and a degree in geoscience, but I was worried about debt and unsure that a degree in Western European music with a few roots music classes tacked on was the education I wanted. So I decided to do the thing: Move to Nashville, and see if I could make a living as a professional musician.

I had been filing my income taxes as a musician since I was about 14, yet I hadn't thought of myself as a professional musician until I moved to Nashville. The cognitive dissonance of that is striking to me now. I don't think that being a hobbyist/enthusiast and a professional are two diametric opposites, or that it's binary at all. The wisdom I like to pass on, that was also something of an epiphany for me, was passed on to me from Béla Fleck. When I first met Béla, he gave me something like an impromptu lesson before his soundcheck at a show with Zakir Hussain and Edgar Meyer near my hometown in Ohio. He walked me through a few techniques, things to help "open up" my fretboard a little more, and in wrapping up thanked me because he was on his way to Boston soon to guest teach at Berklee. I immediately felt inferior and said something like, "Oh, well, I'm sure they'll be much more adept students than I am." (My self-deprecating streak persists to this day!)

When he heard me say that, he stopped what he was doing and turned to look at me and said something like, "It's not about being 'best' or better than anyone else. It's about being the best version of you that you can be."

I needed to hear that as a teenager and I think everyone who picks up an instrument, especially a banjo, needs to hear that. It's not competitive, it's not about being the technically best player or performer or creator. It's about expressing your selfhood as genuinely as you can, as precisely as possible.

BGE: You have a distinctive playing style that is strongly based in Scruggs, but goes beyond that. Your playing is extremely clean and punchy. When I hear a track you play on, I can tell it's you. How did you develop your own style, and do you have a musical "secret weapon"?

Justin: This is a perfect question to follow my last answer, because what I would call my "secret weapon" is that expression of self that I described. I just want to step on stage, or in front of a microphone, and play what's happening in my head. It turns out my head thinks in a pretty bluegrass vocabulary most of the time, but here and there the edges are frayed or splitting open and some weird, random, oblique colors and textures come in. Which is just a really fancy way of saying I never really play the same thing twice. Except I always play the same things a lot. It's a banjo. It's all the same.

Innovation, that individualistic expression, is an intrinsic part of banjo playing. It's how Earl invented this entire style. Think about Don Reno, Ralph Stanley, Sonny Osborne, J.D. Crowe, Eddie Adcock, Alison Brown, Kristin Scott Benson — they all are who they are because they sound like themselves. Because they're constantly asking themselves what they want to sound like, whether they're consciously responding to that question or not!

BGE: I've heard you say you consider yourself a songwriter first, and a banjo player second. I know you also teach and hold an influential position within the community as Social Media Director with The Bluegrass Situation. You've also been a change agent due to your involvement in Bluegrass Pride. Given all this, how do you view your overall role within the bluegrass world?

Justin: I hope it's not too self-aggrandizing to say that wearing all those different hats, being all these different things to all these different people, is as bluegrass as bluegrass gets. This is "homespun" music. It's always been promoted and performed and propagated by the folks who make it. I see myself as just one link in that long traditional bluegrass chain.

That "homespun" nature doesn't mean we have to be ass backwards, though. We can operate at industry standard levels and not just with the bluegrass community and industry as our standard. We can hold ourselves accountable for the future of the music, and own our responsibility for its past as well. We can really step up and deliver on the quality and potential of this music, if we hold all these things in mind. But all that being said, I just want to be able to make a living making music. All my other tangential, accidental, or purposeful sidebars in my career will remain secondary to that dream, even if pragmatically and intellectually and consciously they might beat it out for first here and there.

BGE: Do you think there's a resurgence or renaissance happening right now for bluegrass? If so, why do you think that is? If not, what would it take to make that happen? What is different from the past in the current iteration of the music's popularity?

Justin: Bluegrass is constantly going through a renaissance cycle, and we're in one now, but people have different views of where we're at in the cycle. Some see us as on the tail end of the O Brother, Where Art Thou? renaissance — the film has its 20-year anniversary next year. Others see bluegrass as never being popular enough, never being truly woven into the zeitgeist, never getting its due. There are a lot of differing opinions on this question.

I think that we're at the inception point, the proverbial big bang, of a new renaissance. One born as a result of bluegrass throwing the doors open and looking out into the world and saying, overtly, for the first time in its history, "We want YOU here. Yes, you. No matter who you are or where you come from or how you got here, we want you to be a part of this thing."

It's going to take work, it's going to take a lot of effort and intention, but that's the road I see us on. And only a handful of years into this movement to make bluegrass more representative and inclusive, we're already seeing pretty seismic changes. It's encouraging and bolstering and yeah, I think it validates my point.

BGE: How have events and challenges in your personal life shaped your career? What do you bring with you from your personal life into your artistry and writing, and what, if anything, do you choose to leave out?

Justin: My songwriting is painfully transparent. I sometimes try to temper it — it seems narcissistic at times — but it turns out the art I create that resonates with me the most, the most compelling stories I want to tell, are just my heart and soul open and accessible to all. At least, that's how it feels to me. I want it to feel like that, I want my work to have that level of emotional intelligence, but it's taxing and sometimes can be a barrier to entry. I try to be intentional and not gratuitous. It's a journey.

Challenges in my personal life are probably why bluegrass has stuck by me so incessantly through the decades. It's great music for dealing with struggles. It was born out of these musics that were created as literal escapes from the horrors of everyday reality. That's what music is. That's what art and entertainment are. Especially when you add the therapeutic aspect of processing those struggles, pouring them out of yourself in song. Music gets me through. I often say I'm not really a music fan, but music is my life, it's who I am, it's my passion, it's my love.

BGE: Who are the unsung heroes of your life? Who/what do you look to for inspiration?

Justin: My grandma bought "The Hiltner Brothers" our first sound system. We used that cobbled-together PA system for years. It really enabled us to put some "miles" under our performing feet. She passed away last year and it means a lot to me to consider how she's such an integral part of my career, since she was one of the building blocks it grew upon.

Richard Hood, one of my first banjo teachers, is one of the greatest human beings I've ever met. He gave me a banjo I still play today. He taught me how to really learn banjo by ear. He got me started on vinyl records. He was also a college professor, in literature and later in his career in bluegrass, too, so he gave me a gorgeous collection of classic books and even spoke at my homeschool graduation ceremony, reading a poem that's still one of my favorites to this day ("Ithaka" by Constantine Cavafy).

Another banjo teacher who doesn't get enough credit as a picker and a savant, genius walking banjo encyclopedia is Greg Earnest. We banjo nerds know it, but the greater community should know how awesome a guy and musician he is.

As something of an aside, a nice "unsung hero" factoid I like to throw out here and there is that the first recording of a banjo ever made was of a woman player, Samantha Bumgarner. Bad. Ass.

BGE: You've collaborated with some bluegrass luminaries such as Jon Weisberger, Laurie Lewis, Tim O'Brien and Roland White, which has led to several IBMA nominations. What were these experiences like, what have you brought to and taken from them, and who else would you love to collaborate with in the future?

Justin: Roland gave me my first gig ever at the Station Inn in Nashville and just this year he gave me my first IBMA Award nomination ever, since he had me play on his record, and our track, "Soldier's Joy/Ragtime Annie" was nominated for Collaborative Recording of the Year. Those are just the most tangible ways he's touched me. I really cannot praise Roland enough for the impact he's had on the music and the influence and inspiration he gives me on a regular basis, but especially any of those incredible times we get to share the stage together.

A couple of years after I moved to town, I was having a casual conversation with a friend about how there just aren't many sideman gigs out there that would be a good fit for me, musically, but also because I'm openly gay. He said, "You know who you should play with? Laurie Lewis." Jump five or six years ahead and I'm playing gigs with Laurie Lewis, pinching myself again, wondering how the stars aligned to bring about these dreams of mine. I think Laurie is one of the best musicians and songwriters to ever cross this globe. She certainly transcends the globe at least, and I take every opportunity I can get to shout that from the rooftops. She's horribly, horribly underappreciated -- even with the heaps and heaps and heaps of accolades and ceaseless acclaim she enjoys. It will just never capture her magic, it's impossible!

If I landed on a desert island with only a complete five-piece bluegrass band (including myself), I'd want it to be Tristan Scroggins, Molly Tuttle, Vickie Vaughn, and Corrina Logston Stephens. But there are many others I want to work with. My friend Yola is taking over the world right now, and I daydream all the time about working with her. I'd like to record an album with only queer artists and musicians. I really want to do a Lee Ann Womack tribute show. I want to write a musical based in North Dakota. I could go on and on.

BGE: Bluegrass music is a style that relies heavily on tradition, and there seems to be an ongoing debate regarding what is or isn't traditional, and what that even means. What does tradition mean to you in terms of this music and in terms of modern life? What are some traditions you see as vital, and which ones would you like to see go away forever?

Justin: Traditional bluegrass, to me, is pretty easy to identify. It sounds like Bill Monroe on the Opry with Cedric, Chubby, Lester, and Earl. It sounds like Flatt & Scruggs at Carnegie Hall. Or Dr. Ralph with Keith and Ricky.

I don't think the Lonesome River Band, for example, is "traditional bluegrass." Or say, Blue Highway. I think they're about as far afield from "traditional bluegrass" as the Punch Brothers or Crooked Still. Somewhere along the way (Bluegrass Album Band? J.D. Crowe & the New South? Osborne Brothers?) the term "traditional bluegrass" has been massaged in such a way that we think this is the most traditional stuff, but really it's more like neo-traditional bluegrass that sounds like '90s singer/songwriter country radio played by a bluegrass band.

Don't get me wrong, I freakin' love that style of bluegrass. I love LRB, Sammy Shelor is a genius -- and a Steve Martin prize winner, for good reason. I chose example bands arbitrarily. It's just not "traditional."

I say all this to bring up my main point: Maybe we don't need to worry so much about what is and isn't traditional. Maybe bluegrass isn't just the center of the wheel, from which the spokes radiate, taking the central ideas of the music into more obscure reaches. Maybe it's the entire wheel. Maybe old-time and blues and down-home country music and string band music and jug band music and dance string band music and bluegrass are all the same thing. We can quibble about the distinctions. I love doing that. I write about music for a living, but the quibbling should be because it's fun to talk about music, not because the labels and hard lines and distinctions really matter.

BGE: You recently released "Watch It Burn," your well-received collaboration with Jon D. Weisberger on Robust Records. I've spent a lot of time with this record, and it sounds seamless to me -- I can't tell at all who wrote what. Who wrote what, and how did the songs evolve? Will you be touring in support of it, and can we expect a local show here in Oregon?

Justin: We would LOVE to play a show in Oregon, so please, all my wonderful OBA folks, drop our names or supplicate the powers that be --and we'll do the same! We weren't able to tour in support of the record because just as it was released, I had some health issues crop up last year, but we are planning on doing some mini touring here and there, because we like each other a lot and like the music and want to make it happen!

As far as who wrote what, pretty easy answer: Jon and I co-wrote everything on it except the tune, "General Kuster," which was written by our mutual friend Brandon Godman. Now, I figure you mean more specifically, of the co-written material on the record, who wrote what bits, but it actually was as seamless as you described. I brought the majority of the ideas to the table, but Jon and I work so well together, pretty much in lock step, the songs built themselves pretty equally.

"This Isn't How I Wanted to Come Home" is a song about my grandma passing, so that one has more of me in it, if you measured by volume, but something I love about working with Jon is that he can be such a thoughtful, genuine, songwriting chameleon. He took the aspects of my life and my relationship with my grandmother that I brought and helped me form them into that song. So yeah, word for word we probably are about equal, even as counter-intuitive as that may seem.

I guess Jon is just really, really good at method acting through song!

BGE: What else can we look forward to in your expansive and ever-evolving career? What projects do you have in the works, what are your goals in the coming year, and what is just a twinkle in your eye?

Justin: I have so many ideas rumbling around in my head and heart, I can't wait to see how they all develop and grow. I'm working on recording a solo album, just me, the banjo, and a bunch of my sad songs. I hope to see a single or two early next year with an album drop in 12 to 18 months. Ish! I have so many songs that I'm ready for the world to hear. Since John Hartford, no one has really done solo banjo music that's song-centered. There's plenty of it based on instrumental music, but almost none dedicated to storytelling through song.

The forever twinkle in my eye is taking the diversity showcase that I produce, Shout & Shine, on tour! IBMA's Wide Open Bluegrass festival this year included our fourth annual Shout & Shine as well, we had an amazing lineup, our biggest crowds, a gender/queer inclusive square dance, artists of color, LGBTQ+ folks, an indigenous performer for the first time. I want to take this message, this mission, on the road. Putting it out into the universe now, going to make it happen!
